POETRY.

[From the Sunday Morning Voice.] THE BATTLE FIELD.

When on Caisa's checkered field Her mimic armies we array, When without sabre, spear, or shield We join in merce relentless fray. With plot and counterplot we wage Round castle walls tenacious strife. And all our powers of soul engage

No booming canon fills with fear The adversary's trembling heart, No rolling drum or ringing cheer Inspires to act a gallant part. No bugle note, or clarion tone Sends legions charging o'er the plain, But victor crowned is he alone

Whose is the shrewdest, clearest brain. The gladiator's form and mein, His brazen bones and toughened thews, His brawny limbs, are powers I ween Caissa's votaries never used; They used no fraud, no low deceit, No hazard turn of eard or die, No artifice of gambling cheat,

No skill to look, or act a lie. Around the board 'tis ever meet, That Candour hold no humble place, That Sterling Honour takes his seat, Supported by each gentle Grace, That Patience soothe the Knights who fall, O'er-vanquished in the bloodless strife, And Courtesy preside o'er all. To give the zest of social life.

Where cultured mind meets cultured mind, Where those who win the meed of fame, Are GENTLEMEN, complete, refined, Where thought, the subtle power of thought, Links force to force in perfect train, Till all to unity are brought, As welded links make up a chain. Here let us rear Caissa's fane, Here consecrate to her a shrine,

Ours is the true, the noble game,

Have gathered in from far and near To wreathe around her radiant brow.

the MINER, I notice that you quote me for authority in saying that the Southern Paeific Railroad would soon start a branch from Murongo Pass to the Needles. The S. P. R. R. Co., two years since, asked the privilege of filing new maps, but was not successful. Had they got that privilege, it was their intention to examine the Murongo Pass route. But, in conversation of American interests at the Universal Exwith Crocker, Hopkins and Colton, at their office, they stated, that as soon as they completed the Texas and Pacific branch to Yuma, they would draw off their force and commence on the main line,-commencing at Mohave station near Telegraph Pass, and lay the rails to the Needles. "One road finished," Mr. Hopkins said, "and it would rapid advances of the Russians is all ributed be but a short job to lay the track to the to the total want of officient Needles, as it was an easy country to lay a the part of the track over."
